Week 3 – SRS and OUCD

👤 mycookiebook   🕐 18. Oct 2020   📁 Allgemein   🏷 OUCD, SRS, Week3   ✏️ Edit

Hello Cookies,

we've had a lot going on here in the last week!

We finally started going into detail with our CookieBook. For example, we have designed the surface. Here you can see the preliminary result. The menu bar at the top should make it easier for you to find recipes and create new ones. There will be a picture on the start page. Currently we are still unsure whether we should link the latest recipes on the home page. What do you think? Would the function help you, or do you have a better idea? Feel free to leave us a comment.

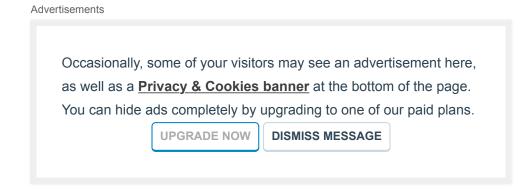

We have also thought about the applications for you as the user. So what is important for the user to realize that the website is usable. With this link you can see the resulting OUCD. We want to realize the yellow colored applications until Christmas. The gray applications are optional features and we are still figuring out if we're going to realize them or not.

Additionally, we worked on our Software Requirements Specification Documentation (SRS).

Stay tense and healthy!

Hello Cookies:)

Your first draft for the layout is simple but still looks very elegant. I think that for the start page not necessarily the latest recipes but rather the most frequently called recipes would be useful. Another idea would be to divide recipes into folders and then display these folders on the start page.
Your goals for Christmas sound realistic and already include the basic functions to use your application. The features you want to implement until June are also a good idea as there are several ways to find recipes.
We are curious how this first version will look like.

Hello MyCookieBook-Team,

At first, we want to give you an answer for your question, which is mentioned in the blogpost. We would fully support adding 'latest added recipes' to your page. It could be a nice addition to search for new recipe and get new thought-provoking impulse for our meals 🔍.

Your UCD is very nice and complete, but you could replace the many many lines with colored boxes, to make it easier to understand for us 😉. Also you have a typo in your blogpost, it should be Use-Case-Diagram (UCD) instead of OUCD.

At next, you also put a lot of effort into your SRS and it looks pretty good too. We can't find any mistakes or failures, but you maybe could embed the image into point 2.2 ? Also, it's not completely finished but that should be ok if we look on our own SRS 😅, hopefully you can finish it this week.

Keep the fantastic work up 👍,

Your friends from TaskHub (B4)

Hey TaskHub,

thank you for your feedback and your opinion on the main page.

Unfortunately, we do not understand exactly what you mean with the colored boxes? Can you elaborate on that? An alternative to the lines sounds very good and we would also like to implement. OUCD means Overall-Use-Case-Diagram and we got to know it under this name. But we probably mean the same thing.

We're glad that you like our SRS. We have already thought about the suggestion to share the OUCD as an image in 2.2. However, since changes to the diagram may still be made, we would like to save the OUCD as a link, so that you can always see the current status.
Of course, we will also strive to complete SRS as soon as possible. Good luck with your SRS!

Have a nice day and stay save,
your CookieBook-Team
